two o'clock yesterday afternoon, and right away there was a rush for the levee. The steamer Artemus Lamb was rounding the bend at the head of the island of Rock Island. There was a welcome response to her signal from the whistle on the government bridge, and immediately the draw commenced swinging. Down came the steamer through the draw-channel, and again she sent forth her senerous announcement that navigation was open. By this time nearly a thousand men had assembled on the levee, all watching the course of the Artemus with great interest.
